

Washington State Emergency Domestic Violence Shelter and Supportive Services

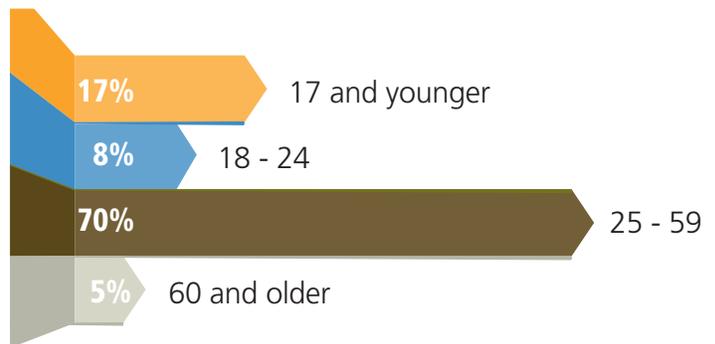

The Department of Social and Health Services (DSHS) domestic violence program distributes significant state and federal funding dedicated to providing emergency shelter and supportive services for victims of domestic violence and their dependent children. In state fiscal year 2017, DSHS disbursed $13,035,679 to 42 emergency domestic violence shelters across the state of Washington, 40 percent of which were from state funds. Local domestic violence programs served 24,692 victims of domestic violence and their children in 2017, 5,672 of whom received emergency shelter. Domestic violence programs consistently report that DSHS funding is critical to keeping their doors open and providing life-saving services to members of their communities.

Washington State Emergency Domestic Violence Shelter and Supportive Services

Shelter and Supportive Services Local domestic violence programs provide emergency domestic violence shelter to victims of domestic violence and their dependent children. In addition to shelter, residents receive supportive services such as advocacy, legal assistance, access to support groups and other specialized services based on each person's unique needs. The majority of service recipients, however, receive non-shelter based services such as advocacy, assistance with protection orders and other legal issues, and access to support groups. In 2017, the 42 domestic violence shelter programs provided 223,152 shelter bednights to victims and their families. Victims stayed in shelter an average of 37 days in 2017.

Average shelter stay was 37 nights

Local domestic violence programs offer community education and training opportunities to organizations and the public about domestic violence. This could be a training or presentation to local faith-based leaders, teachers or hosting an information table at a community event. In 2017 domestic violence programs provided training and presentations to 56,289 individuals.

She was married for almost 50 years to an abusive man. When she first came to us, she was a wreck, couldn't see where her future would take her, felt terrified by the court process and what he was going to do to her financially. We provided her with services and support over the next 18 months, and in a thank-you note she wrote, "I can't thank you enough! Sometimes you just need that little sign that the entire world isn't working against you."

Meeting Survivors' Needs

Beginning in July 2008, survivors receiving services at domestic violence programs funded by DSHS had the opportunity to provide confidential feedback on the services they received. In response to two questions answered by 1,378 survivors in 2017:

1,291 (94 percent) responded that as a result of receiving services, they know more ways to plan for their safety.

1,275 (93 percent) responded that as a result of receiving services, they know more about community resources.

These outcomes are consistent with the findings from two national multi-state studies that documented the experiences of survivors who received emergency shelter¹ and non-shelter based services² from domestic violence programs.
