Where did domestic violence victims turn for help?

Domestic violence fatality reviews showed that nearly all victims reached out for help to family and friends. Victims turned to informal support systems earlier and more often than the legal system.

![Bar chart showing sources of support sought by domestic violence victims in reviewed fatality cases.]

- Family or friends: 92%
- Neighbors: 45%
- Workplace: 31%
- Law enforcement: 52%
- Protection order: 31%

Sources of support sought by domestic violence victims in reviewed fatality cases.

Find more online at wscadv.org

- Get up-to-date statewide fatality statistics.
- Learn more about WSCADV’s work to prevent domestic violence.
- Find resources for friends and families.

This document was supported by funding from the Washington State Department of Social and Health Services, Children’s Administration. The points of view presented in this document are those of the author and do not necessarily represent the official position or policies of the Washington State Department of Social and Health Services. Any reproduction of material contained in this document must acknowledge WSCADV as the source and include the attribution language above.
Victims turned to friends and family first and most often. In nearly all reviewed domestic violence fatalities, the victim had reached out to friends, family, neighbors or co-workers. Friends and family were the first line of support for victims and their children, and often were aware of the abuse long before it escalated to lethal violence.

Victims can’t rely on the legal system alone. In nearly a third of fatalities, police had no contact with the victim and abuser prior to the homicide. Fewer than half of domestic violence incidents that were reported to police resulted in the abuser being arrested.

Friends and family need support to be supportive. In most cases, friends and family wanted to be helpful, but did not know how. Abusers attempted to sabotage victims’ supportive relationships and isolate them from community. Friends and family need support to maintain and rebuild those connections over time.

Resources for Advocates

Check out WSCADV’s Model Protocol on Working with Friends and Family of Domestic Violence Victims. Available at wscadv.org.

It Takes a Village, People! is a new toolkit for advocates working with LGBT survivors to strengthen support networks, and working with friends and family to support LGBT survivors. Available at nwnetwork.org.

Resources for Everyone

How’s your relationship? Tools for talking about healthy relationships with people of all ages. Chat about love with those you love! Available at wscadv.org.

LoveisRespect.org has online tools for adult and teen survivors including step-by-step tips for building a support network in your community, at home, in school, or at work.